CAMPBELL, FREW & CO.

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 9. It is of course useless for us to waste words with the editor of the Clarksburg Conservative, Major Bill Cooper, late of the rebel army, as to his proper position here in West Virginia. He does not seem to see anything peculiar in it himself. He regards himself as unjustly deprived of certain political rights, and It is of course useless for us to waste er person to instruct public sentiment in matters of Constitutional duty, and arrogates all the functions of a critic whose record can not be impugued. One would naturally suppose that modesty and great charity ought to be the distinguishing characteristics of a man who had committed treason, and whose hands have been treason, and whose hands have been dyed in the blood of the nation's defenders. The quiet and least demonstrative spheres of life are cer-tainly those best befitting the occupancy of such a person. But Major Bill oper does not think so. Like the "brawling woman," described by Solon, he vaunts himself shamele on the house-top, and apparently fails proach of his status. A party whose Interests are served and advocated by a defeated traitor, is justly an object of

The people knew full well that as soon as the war was over, large numbers of the rebels who had left the outlying counties of the State, would return, and that one of their first endeavors would be to dominate in those counties by the same arts of political and personal bravado with which the ordinance of secession had been carried. Tables are given in the volume to show that this should take place periodically at intervals of about seventeen years. Seventeen millions of taxes, he says, might be abated in 1833, by which time three hundred millions of the principal would be paid off. In another term of seventeen years seventeen millions more might be abated, and so on.

Mr. J. S. (ibborn, of New York, has written a book, published by Charles Scribper & Co., with the title, "Public Debt of the United States, its Organization, the United States, its Organization of the weath of the wards of the work of the United States, its Organization of the Work of the W

the borrower and the lender ought to be reciprocal, and if not so, they will be unjust. If unjust the public credit will suffer.

We issue our Annual Wool Circular for 1867 in a season of great depression with manufacturers. The decline in manufactured goods, for months past, as been gradual and steady. Although mill owners purchased wool apparently low enough, still most kinds and parently low enough, still most kinds aways it is worth its weight in gold.

By Italian and the lender ought to be interrupted. The country, the condition of affairs lust as the new cilp is being prepared. the country, the condition of affairs just as the new clip is being prepared for the market, will beget, on the part of dealers and manufacturers, great caution in purchases. Its influence is felt already in the settled policy, now almost universal, of buying just enough to keep mills going on abridged time. This unusual and unlooked for depression to the part of the country of the part reflects injury on productive labors.

Our debt, he urged, ought to be all for depression in the goods trade, indeed, legal tender notes included. The yearly interest of it would be one hundred and sixty-two millions. By it is an indicated and sixty-two millions. By it is an indicated and sixty-two millions only, as a constant yearly payment of principal, to be considers himself a proper six mong the people whom he deserted in time of trouble and upon whom he made flagrant war for years, and to undertake in an editorial way to foster a feeling as near akin to his own as possible. He considers himself a proper person to instruct public and the productive labors.

Our debt, he urged, ought to be all for depression in the goods trade, has reduced the current consumption far below what was anticipated. It has forced the mills to adopt short time and limited production. Therefore, the present supply of domestic wool, though not large, is sufficient to bridge over to the new clip. Whilst manufacturers are losing money they are of course not anxious to purchase. They know the youndertake in an editorial way to foster a feeling as near akin to his own as possible. He considers himself a proper of the current consumption far below what was anticipated. It has forced the mills to adopt short time and limited production. Therefore, the present supply of domestic wool, though not large, is sufficient to bridge over to the new clip. Whilst manufacturers are losing money they are of course not anxious to purchase. They know the prices cannot go higher. Indeed, they will be compelled to suspend opera has the moment its reduction is necessary to fix would violate the natural law which requires taxation to be reduced to the present and limited production. Therefore, the same limited production. Therefore, the present supply of domestic wool, though not large, is sufficient to bridge over to the new clip. Whilst manufacturers are losing money they are of course not anxious to purchase. They know the present and immediately the p rates are derhanded. As these conflicting interests face each other squarely, the grower knowing from the price of manufactured goods that the manufacturer has little or no margin, and the latter feeling in his shrinking capital the absolute necessity of caution, it is hardly probable that wool prices will vary materially during the balance of the season. If, however, the present depression in the goods trade should run into the fall season, those who sell their wool in the summer months will their wool in the summer months will realize better prices than holders for winter and spring sales.

The new crop of wool is generally estimated at fitten millions pounds larger than the clip of 1866. Speculation of it he says:

"The independent treasury, however, may exercise a fatal control over the currency, the banks and the trade of the country, and will do so whenever the revenue shall greatly exceed the expenses. There has been expended since the 4th of March, 1853, more than $15,625,000 in the redemption of the public debt. This debt has been presented.

The influence that foreign wools will have upon prices of American, is fairly the fairly interest.

St5,625,000 in the redemption of the public debt. This debt has been presented from time to time, as the money accumulated in the mational treasury, and caused stringency in the money market. If there had been no public debt and no means of disbursing this large sum and again giving it to the channels at commerce, the accumulated sum would have acted fatally on banks and on trade."

Mr. Gibbons proposes that the bonds representing the debt be made payable without date, for two principal reasons. One is, that this is the only way to keep the form the fatall probably response to the fatall probably strength of the fatall probably and will also be observed with much interest. positions through the medium of politics, and that no resource to effect their purpose, even down to every species of terrorism, would be left untried. Therefore they passed a law making an attempt to regain their forfeited ascendancy unavailing. In other words they prescribed an oath which such people as Major Bill Cooper should take before they could resume the exercise of political power, and thus sought to protect the loyal element in the exposed counties against subjugation by returned rabels. The vindictiveness of the rebel element had been seen and felt, not only during the memorable contest upon the ordinance, but all through the war, both in the way of invasive outrages and in the disfranchising and disabling statutes passed by them at Richmond.
